

A Small Collection of Random Thoughts

Rain tapped softly against the window while the city moved at its usual hurried pace. Somewhere nearby, a kettle began to whistle.

A yellow bicycle leaned against an old brick wall, its basket filled with lavender, postcards, and one forgotten orange.

Every ordinary day contains a few hidden details: a kind smile, a new idea, or a quiet moment that stays with us longer than expected.

The moon rose above the rooftops, turning the clouds silver. For a moment, the whole neighbourhood looked like a page from a storybook.
